Douglass School Hallway

Douglass School in Webster Groves was established for African-American children and was named for Frederick Douglass, the famous ex-slave, abolitionist and orator.

The school originally offered courses through eighth grade. Douglass High School opened in 1925 and as the only high school for African-American students in St. Louis County, served students from across the area until the United States Supreme Court decision outlawing school segregation in 1954.

Douglass was renowned for its rigorous academic program, outstanding teachers and proud graduates. It held its first commencement in May 1929 and its last in 1956. The elementary school closed in 1978.

For decades, Douglass stood as the heart of a close-knit community that prides itself on its commitment to education. This hallway commemorates the Douglass legacy in the Webster Groves School District.
